Golf

1. How has golf equipment changed over the last 20 years? What are the upsides and downsides of the new technology?
2. Golf courses use huge amounts of water and chemicals on their grass. What can be done to make golf more environmentally friendly?
3. How is the experience of playing at a cheap public course different from playing at an expensive private club?
4. What are the advantages and disadvantages of golf being such a slow-paced sport?
5. Compare how golf is portrayed in movies versus real life. What's accurate and what's exaggerated?
6. What challenges do women face in golf compared to men? What can be done to make the sport more equal?
7. What role does mental strength play in golf compared to physical skill? How much do they affect performance?
8. Compare how golf is viewed in different parts of the world. Why might the same sport have such different reputations?
9. What are the advantages and disadvantages of golf being a sport where players compete individually rather than as a team?
10. Some people argue that professional golfers are not real athletes. What are the strongest arguments on both sides?
11. Golf has a traditional image and changes slowly. Does this help preserve its identity, or does it push younger generations away?
12. Golf has traditionally been a sport where men, women, and different age groups play separately. How is this changing, and is that a good thing?
13. Tiger Woods changed golf by bringing in fans who had never watched the sport before. How much can a single person actually change the culture of an entire sport?
14. Golf is often described as relaxing, but professional golfers deal with extreme pressure. How does a sport manage to be both a casual hobby and a high-stress career at the same time?

Golf

1. Golf etiquette emphasizes honor, self-policing, and unspoken rules. What does this tell us about the social class and trust assumptions built into the sport?
2. Why do so many business deals happen on a golf course instead of in an office? What does that tell us about how power and trust actually work?
3. Golf requires players to call penalties on themselves, even when no one is watching. What does this honor system reveal about how we think about cheating in sports versus in everyday life?
4. Some golf clubs that were once symbols of exclusion are now trying to become more diverse. Can an institution truly change its culture, or does the history always remain?
5. Golf courses take up large areas of land, often in cities where housing is scarce. When is it fair for a community to prioritize recreation over other needs, and who gets to make that decision?
6. In golf, slow and steady play is valued, but modern audiences want fast, exciting content. How are traditional sports adapting to shorter attention spans, and what do they lose in the process?
7. Many young people see golf as old-fashioned and out of touch, yet golf influencers and content creators are growing fast on social media. How does a sport reinvent its image for a new generation without losing what made it appealing in the first place?
8. In most sports, athletes come from all kinds of backgrounds, but golf champions have historically come from wealthy families with early access to courses and coaching. What does this say about how talent is discovered and developed in society — are we missing potential champions simply because they never got the chance to pick up a club?
9. Golf is one of the few sports where players of very different ages and ability levels can play together in the same game using a handicap system. Why haven't more areas of life — like workplaces or schools — adopted similar systems to level the playing field between people with different advantages?
